STAPLE PRODUCTS FROM JAPAN. Agriculturists throughout the State will Would respectfully invite the attention of the Farmers of Maryland and Virginia to their large and have two cargoes of the staple products of Japan. They come by the Onward and the cot Brooks of this city, at whose store we find samples for inspection. Among the cargoes were a large number of sacks of sweet potatoes. They have much the appearance of the Carolinas, but within are of a vellowish white. Those who have tasted them say that their quality and flavor is far better than the California potato Road Scoops, Wheat Drills, and little inferior to the world renowned Resping and Mowing Machines.

It is most used of all oils for lamps in Paris, and its virtues as a lubricant for machinery is well known. Leaf tobacco is also one of the importations by the Onward. The specimens were of different qualities. One lot seemed exceedingly delicate, and resembled the Havana leaf. The tip usually employed for covers, would answer the purpose well, no doubt, being very thin and having small

The pears were beautiful to look at, plump and heavy, resembling a mammoth rusty coat apple in shape. The core showed the true pear characteristic. Raw they tasted insipid, and seemed to be devoid of "bottom." Those who have tried them say that when stewed with sugar or molasses, they make a capital dish, the flavor coming out well. The rice is a "stubby," brief, little article, not nearly as long as a our Southern
